Cross-Linguistic Computational Analysis of Copula Deletion in Indian Languages

Annotated Multi-Language Sentence Compendium Mapped to Hypotheses H1, H2, and H3 (Language Order: Hindi · Assamese · Bengali · Telugu · Tamil)

Course: HS5652 — Language, Cognition and Computation (Jan–May 2026) | Group: Sairam, Varsha, Arya, Nitish, Swapnil

H1 · Register & Diglossic Conditioning

Hypothesis: Informal spoken dialogue exhibits higher present-tense copula omission than formal literary narration.
Finding: Strongly confirmed in Hindi (36.3% film dialogue vs 17.7% literary narrative after removing past/verbal noise, $p = 1.17\times10^{-13}$) and in Assamese (+66.0 pp) & Tamil (+58.8 pp) specifically within Locative/Existential predicates. In Bengali and Telugu, affirmative nominal zero-copula is grammaticalized across both registers.

H2 · Universal Predicate Type Hierarchy

Hypothesis: Deletion follows `Equational/Nominal` & `Adjectival` >> `Locative/Existential`.
Finding: Universally confirmed across all 5 languages (all $p < 10^{-5}$, Cramér's $V = 0.17$–0.65). Spatial location and existence require explicit lexical anchoring via overt existential verbs (Hindi hai, Assamese ase, Bengali aachhe, Telugu undi, Tamil ullathu/irukku).

H3 · Polarity & Negation-Copula Fusion

Hypothesis: Negative polarity restricts or blocks copula deletion.
Finding: Sharp 4-vs-1 typological split: Assamese (নহয়/নাই), Bengali (নয়/নেই), Telugu (కాదు/లేదు), and Tamil (இல்லை/அல்ல) exhibit 0.0% deletion in negatives because negation is morphologically fused into dedicated negative copulas. Hindi (34.9% deletion) is the sole exception because standalone नहीं (nahin) licenses है (hai) drop.
